

SCHOOL YEAR TO INCREASE UTAH LABOR PROBLEM

High Education Standard May Be Threatened If Students Work

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 6 (UP)—Business, educational and agricultural leaders today faced a five-fold obstacle in their efforts to solve the problem of replenishing Utah's dwindling labor supply with school-age workers and still maintain a high standard of education.

The obstacles: Utah law requires all persons under 18 years of age to attend school until they reach the age of 18, or graduate from high school; the child labor bugaboo; reluctance on the part of parents to permit their children to engage in part time work; limited abilities of teen-age youngsters; and the problem of determining school credits of a part-time worker.

A committee of ten leaders, including representatives of parent-teachers' associations and Dr. L. John Nuttal, superintendent of Salt Lake City schools, met yesterday and after a lengthy session, found themselves wading deeper into the problem with no solution in sight.

The group planned to meet again today and discuss proposals that school hours be staggered to permit students to attend school in the morning and work during the afternoon hours.

CAMP PROVING POPULAR PLACE

Camp Kiesel, near upper South Fork canyon, is very popular this week with the Boy Scouts of Ogden city and Weber county. Ten boys and their leader from Roy spent from Monday until Thursday at camp while occupying the camp for the whole week are troop 23 of North Ogden, under the direction of Scoutmaster fanning; troop 18 of Ogden with Scoutmaster Astle; and troop 11 of the Twentieth ward, Scoutmaster Earl Kilts, handled by Assistant Scoutmaster Henry Clough.

Executive S. D. Young reported: "The boys are enjoying a quick series of hiking, boating, fishing, and swimming. Monday night, troop 18 went on an overnight hike, and Wednesday troop 23 went on a long fishing trip to South Fork narrows.

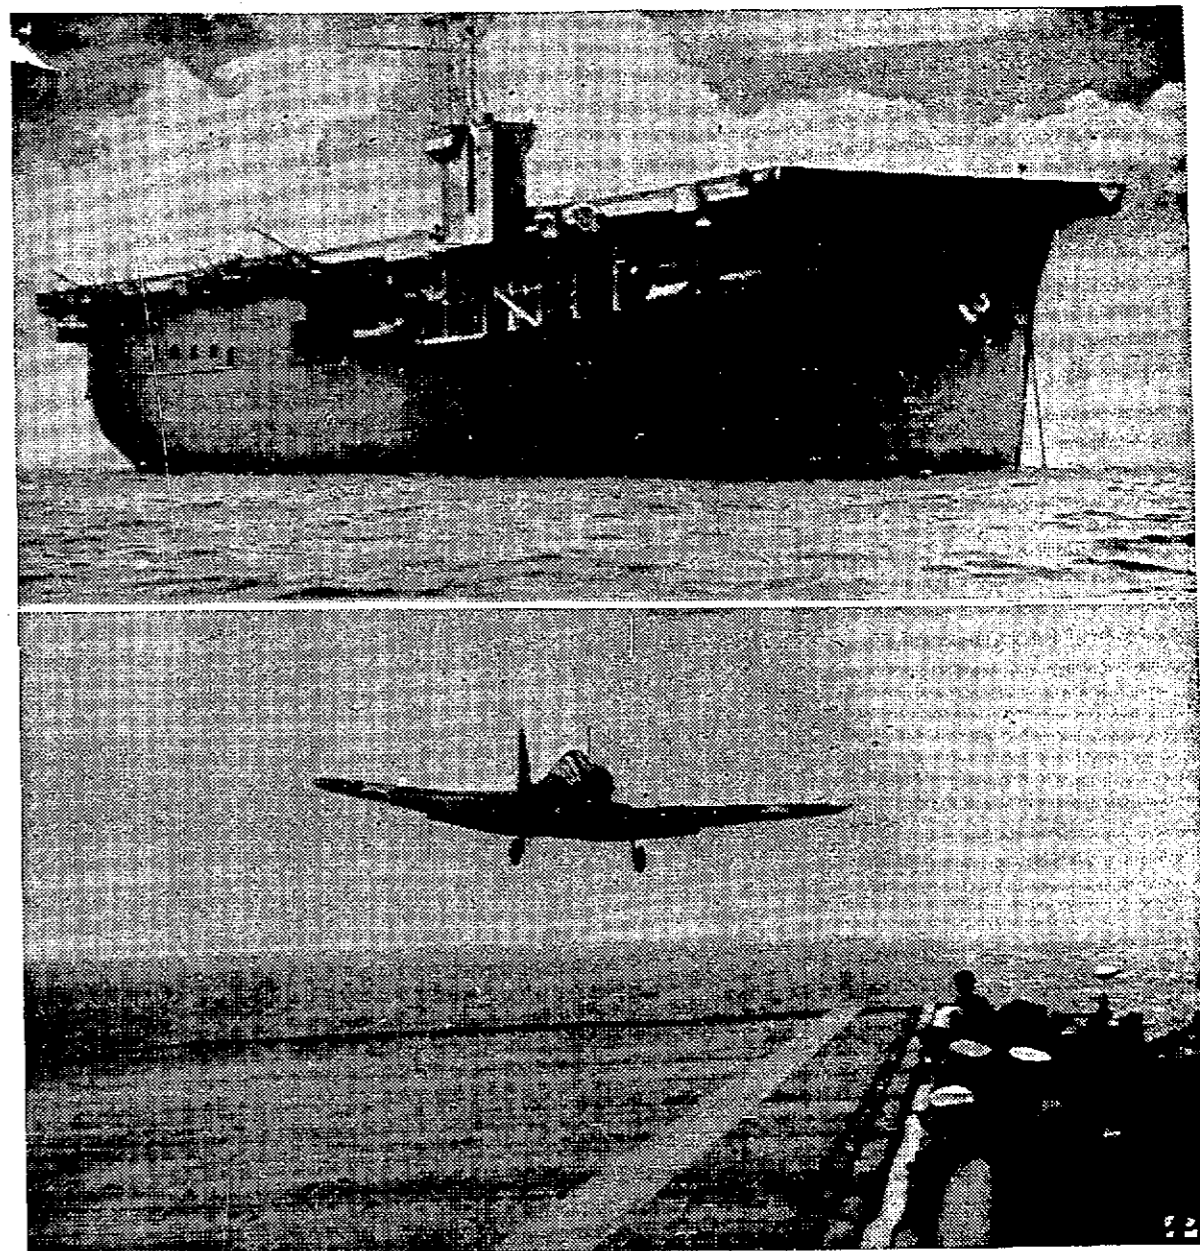

"All the boys who have been at camp this summer have voted it the best ever. Let's hope that before the end of August most of the troops of Ogden city will have been able to go to camp for a few days."
